In late 2017, a bill (H.R. 1) was enacted (P.L. 115-97) that made numerous changes to the federal income tax for individuals and businesses. For a summary of those changes, see CRS Report R45092, The 2017 Tax Revision \(P.L. 115-97\): Comparison to 2017 Tax Law, coordinated by Molly F. Sherlock and Donald J. Marples. (The title of the bill as passed by the House was the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, but it was stricken before final passage under the reconciliation process used to consider the bill.)

The changes in the taxation of individual income have implications for many of the key tax elements that help determine an individual's federal income tax liability from the 2018 to 2025 tax years. Starting in 2026, these elements are scheduled to revert to their levels in 2017, the final tax year under previous law. The individual tax elements that P.L. 115-97 altered include marginal tax rates, the method for adjusting key tax elements for inflation, the standard deduction, personal exemptions, miscellaneous itemized deductions, the child tax credit, charitable contributions, and the use of other itemized deductions such as the deductions for state and local taxes and mortgage interest. For more details on the key elements of the 2018 federal income tax, see CRS Report R45145, Overview of the Federal Tax System in 2018, by Molly F. Sherlock and Donald J. Marples.

This Insight provides links to CRS products that address key individual income tax elements that changed as a result of P.L. 115-97, and that are likely to become concerns for many individuals as they prepare their tax returns for the 2018 tax year. These products are intended to assist congressional staff in responding to tax filing questions from constituents related to those changes. They are current as of the date on the product.
