

Updated March 20, 2024

United Nations Issues: Overview of the United Nations System

The United Nations (U.N.) system comprises interconnected entities including the United Nations, specialized agencies, U.N. peacekeeping operations, funds and programs, and other related bodies. Congress has generally supported the U.N. system and mission, and often uses U.N. mechanisms to further U.S. foreign policy objectives. At the same time, some policymakers have been critical of the U.N. system, arguing that U.N. actions or decisions do not align with U.S. policy priorities, or that it is not operating as effectively as possible.

U.N. entities have different mandates, structures, leadership, and funding mechanisms. Each body is funded through assessed and voluntary contributions from U.N. members (or a combination of both). Assessed contributions are required dues, the payment of which is a legal obligation accepted by a country when it becomes a member. Voluntary contributions finance special funds, programs, and offices.

The United Nations

Established in the aftermath of World War II, the United Nations is an intergovernmental organization composed of 193 member states. The U.N. Charter, a treaty to which the United States is a state party, is the founding document of the United Nations. Article 1 of the Charter states that the purposes of the organization are to maintain international peace and security; develop friendly relations among nations; solve economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian problems; and promote human rights. The United Nations includes six main parts (referred to as “organs”).

- The 193-member General Assembly (GA) is the organization’s primary decisionmaking body. It approves the U.N. regular and peacekeeping budgets and supports the work of its committees and subsidiary organs, such as the U.N. Human Rights Council (HRC).
- The 15-member Security Council (SC) is mandated with maintaining international peace and security. It includes 5 permanent members with veto power (United States, China, France, Russia, and the United Kingdom) and 10 nonpermanent members, who are elected by the GA for two-year terms.
- The Secretariat is the U.N. administrative body located at U.N. Headquarters in New York City. It is led by the Secretary-General (SG), who serves as chief administrative officer. The SG is appointed by the GA on the recommendation of the SC. The SG serves a five-year term, with the possibility for a second term.

The three other principal organs are (1) the U.N. Economic and Social Council, a 54-member body that addresses economic, social, and environmental issues; (2) the International Court of Justice, the principal U.N. judicial body; and (3) the Trusteeship Council, which supervised the administration of trust territories from colonies to sovereign nations and completed its mandate in 1994. (For more information, see CRS Report R47715, The United Nations System: Frequently Asked Questions.)

The United Nations is funded through the U.N. regular budget ($3.6 billion for U.N. FY2024). The United States’ assessed contribution is 22% of the regular budget (an estimated $707.05 million in U.S. FY2024). Other top contributors include China (15.25%) and Japan (8.03%). U.N. members approve assessment levels every three years based on a formula taking into account gross national income and other economic data. The United States often accumulates arrears to the regular budget due to differences between the U.S. and U.N. fiscal years (which affects the timing of U.S. payments) and U.S. withholdings from U.N. activities, among other reasons. (For further discussion of U.N. funding, see CRS In Focus IF10354, United Nations Issues: U.S. Funding to the U.N. System.)

U.N. Specialized Agencies

The U.N. system has 15 specialized agencies, each of which is a legally independent intergovernmental organization with its own constitution, membership, organs, and assessed budget (Figure 1). Many specialized agencies follow the assessments for the U.N. regular budget, while others use their own formulas. The United States is a member of all specialized agencies except for UNIDO and UNWTO.

Figure 1. U.N. Specialized Agencies

Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO)
International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)
International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)
International Labor Organization (ILO)
International Maritime Organization (IMO)
International Monetary Fund (IMF)
International Telecommunication Union (ITU)
U.N. Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization (UNESCO)
● U.N. Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)
● U.N. World Tourism Organization (UNWTO)
Universal Postal Union (UPU)
World Bank Group (WBG)
World Health Organization (WHO)
World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)
World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

● indicates the United States is not a member.

Source: United Nations, adapted by CRS.

U.N. Peacekeeping

The United Nations currently operates 11 U.N. peacekeeping missions worldwide, with more than 70,000 personnel from over 100 countries. The SC is responsible for establishing and renewing each operation, as well as determining the mission's mandate and budget. The United States, as a permanent SC member, plays a key role in shaping peacekeeping missions. The approved budget for the 2023-2024 peacekeeping fiscal year is $6.1 billion. The United States is the largest financial contributor, assessed 26.94% of the total peacekeeping budget, followed by China (18.69%) and Japan (8.03%). In 1994, Congress enacted a 25% cap on U.S. funding to U.N. peacekeeping. Over the years, the gap between the U.S. cap and U.N. assessment has led to the accumulation of about $1.1 billion in arrears. For FY2024, the estimated U.S. contribution to most peacekeeping activities is $1.38 billion, up to the 25% cap. (For more information, see CRS In Focus IF10597, United Nations Issues: U.S. Funding of U.N. Peacekeeping.)

U.N. Funds and Programs

U.N. funds and programs are generally established by the GA and have a specific mandate. The SG appoints the head of each entity, while the governing boards (composed of U.N. member states) review policies and activities. Funds and programs rely on voluntary contributions from governments, the private sector, and civil society. Such contributions might fund the core budgets of these bodies or be earmarked for specific activities. Examples of funds and programs include the U.N. Development Program, U.N. Environment Program, and World Food Program.

Other Entities and Related Organizations

Several other U.N. entities do not fall under the previous categories, including the U.N. Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees, UN Women, and U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. Like U.N. funds and programs, these bodies often focus on specific issues and rely on voluntary funding. Depending on the organization, their heads are appointed by the SG or elected by the GA.

Other separate U.N.-related organizations such as the International Criminal Court, International Atomic Energy Agency, and International Organization for Migration are part of the U.N. system but not considered U.N. bodies. They may have special agreements with or report to U.N. bodies like the GA or SC.

U.S. Participation in the U.N. System

The United States played a lead role in the establishment of the United Nations in 1945 and is the largest financial contributor to many U.N. entities. It is a member of the GA and is a permanent member of the SC. It is also a member of 13 U.N. specialized agencies and is often elected to leadership positions on U.N. boards, councils, and other bodies. U.S. participation in and funding of the United Nations is authorized through the United Nations Participation Act of 1945 (P.L. 79-264, as amended). Authorization for U.S. participation in other U.N. bodies is included in the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (§301 of P.L. 87-195, as amended) and other legislation.

Both Congress and the executive branch have key roles in furthering U.S. policy toward the U.N. system. Congress authorizes and appropriates U.S. funding, while the executive branch represents and shapes U.S. policy through the State Department and the U.S. Mission to the United Nations (USUN) in New York City. The President nominates ambassadors for U.N. posts, and the Senate provides advice and consent for nominees. This includes the U.S. Permanent Representative, who leads USUN and represents the United States in the SC and other U.N. bodies. Over the years, both Congress and the executive branch have adjusted or conditioned U.S. funding to U.N. entities. Many have also sought U.N. reform, with a focus on improving management and accountability mechanisms. Congress further oversees U.S. policy through hearings, reporting requirements, and executive branch consultations.

During the past decade, U.S. policy toward the United Nations has varied. President Obama strongly supported U.S. participation in the organization. President Trump consistently proposed decreases in U.N. funding and withheld contributions to some U.N. bodies. President Biden generally supports U.S. engagement in and funding of the U.N. system.

Congressional Considerations

Congressional debates on U.S. participation in the U.N. system often occur against the backdrop of competing foreign and domestic priorities and broader questions about the role of the United Nations in U.S. foreign policy. The 118th Congress has considered several overarching issues.

U.N. role and effectiveness. Many policymakers have debated the effectiveness of U.N. entities in achieving their mandates. For example, some express concern that the SC has taken insufficient action on certain peace and security issues (such as the Russia-Ukraine conflict and the October 2023 Hamas attacks on Israel), or that the HRC does not effectively address human rights violations (while disproportionately focusing on Israel). At the same time, many acknowledge the benefits of the U.N. system, particularly its convening power, burden-sharing principles, and role in setting global norms and standards.

U.S. funding and reform. Members may consider the benefits and drawbacks of U.S. funding to the U.N. system, including areas where the United States can use funding to increase efficiency and accountability through reform, or to achieve the largest return on its investment. Some policymakers may also consider the impact, if any, of U.S. arrears or withholdings on U.S. influence on U.N. activities.

Influence of other countries. Policymakers may assess the implications of inconsistent or reduced U.S. participation in and funding of the U.N. system during the past decade, including the possible increase in influence within the U.N. of other countries relative to the United States. In particular, many Members have expressed concern with what they perceived to be China's ongoing efforts to increase its influence in the U.N. system.

Luisa Blanchfield, Specialist in International Relations

Disclaimer

This document was prepared by the Congressional Research Service (CRS). CRS serves as nonpartisan shared staff to congressional committees and Members of Congress. It operates solely at the behest of and under the direction of Congress. Information in a CRS Report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to Members of Congress in connection with CRS's institutional role. CRS Reports, as a work of the United States Government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS Report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS Report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain the permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.