Russia’s War Against Ukraine: Overview of U.S. Sanctions and Other Responses

Updated December 20, 2022

On February 24, 2022, Russia launched an undeclared war against Ukraine, a country Russia first invaded and partially occupied in 2014. The United States and many countries around the world have condemned Russia’s “unprecedented military aggression” as “unprovoked and unjustified.” On March 2, 2022, the U.N. General Assembly voted 141-5 to demand Russia “immediately, completely and unconditionally withdraw” from Ukraine (47 countries, including China and India, registered abstentions or did not vote). In response to Russian efforts to annex additional Ukrainian territories in fall 2022, the General Assembly declared by a vote of 143-5 that Russia’s actions had “no validity under international law.”

The United States, the European Union (EU), and others have imposed a series of increasingly severe sanctions on Russia and substantially increased security, humanitarian, and economic assistance to Ukraine. FY2022 and FY2023 supplemental appropriations to date have included $66 billion in emergency assistance for Ukraine and other countries impacted by the war, as well as funding for U.S. European Command and other U.S. agency operations. In response to a request by the President, the proposed FY2023 omnibus appropriations bill includes about $45 billion in Ukraine-related supplemental funds. Congress also has enacted legislation enabling the expedited leasing or lending of defense articles to Ukraine (P.L. 117-118). The House and the Senate have passed related resolutions (H.Res. 956, S.Res. 546, S.Res. 589, S.Res. 623).

U.S. Sanctions

Prior to 2022, the United States had imposed sanctions on Russia in response to Moscow’s 2014 invasion of Ukraine and other malign activities. Beginning in December 2021, the United States and others warned Russia’s leadership that a new attack on Ukraine would lead to severe new sanctions (in addition to increased security assistance to Ukraine and an enhanced NATO presence in Central and Eastern Europe).

Sanctions designations and related actions the Biden Administration and Congress have taken since February 2022 include actions targeting Russian government assets, international trade, broad economic sectors, and specific individuals and entities. These sanctions and related actions include the following:
Restrictions on transactions with Russia’s central bank, limiting its ability to draw on dollar-denominated foreign reserves, as well as on transactions with Russia’s Ministry of Finance and National Wealth Fund

Export controls targeting Russia’s defense, aerospace, and maritime sectors; energy production; and “a wide range of commercial and industrial operations”

A ban on the import to the United States of Russian oil and other energy products (P.L. 117-109; E.O. 14066) and suspension of normal trade relations with Russia and its ally Belarus (P.L. 117-110)

Since February, the Biden Administration also has prohibited the following with respect to Russia:

- New U.S. investment
- U.S. import of gold, diamonds, seafood, and alcoholic beverages
- Export of U.S. luxury goods and dollar-denominated banknotes
- The provision of accounting, trust and corporate formation, management consulting, and quantum computing services
- Secondary-market transactions by U.S. financial institutions in Russian sovereign debt
- Entrance into and use of U.S. airspace
- Entrance into U.S. ports
- U.S. trade or investment in Russia-occupied regions of eastern Ukraine

The Administration also has targeted Russian individuals and entities (including with restrictions on transactions and access to U.S.-based property). New targets since February 2022 include the following:

- Russian President Vladimir Putin, Prime Minister Mikhail Mishustin, members of Russia’s Security Council and Administration (including ministers of foreign affairs, defense, and finance, and heads of the armed forces and central bank), and regional governors
- Russia’s legislature (the State Duma and Federation Council), Central Election Commission, and their members
- Seven of Russia’s largest banks, including the largest two (Sberbank and VTB Bank), which account for 80% of bank deposits
- State development bank VEB and the Russian Direct Investment Fund
- Defense, industrial, and technology conglomerate Rostec
- Alrosa, the world’s largest diamond-mining company
- Severstal and MMK, major steel producers
- Skolkovo, a prominent technology development park
- Nord Stream 2 AG, the parent company for a Russian natural gas pipeline project to Europe
- Dozens of Russia’s Kremlin-connected business elite (many of whom are referred to as oligarchs), their family members, and business executives
- Dozens of aerospace and defense-industrial firms, disinformation and propaganda operations, and sanctions evaders
- Russian or proxy occupation officials
The Administration also has banned entry into the United States for thousands of Russian officials and military personnel.

In addition, the Administration has imposed restrictions against new equity investment and financing for several companies including Gazprom, a state-owned energy company and Russia’s largest firm; Sovcomflot, Russia’s largest maritime and freight shipping firm; and Russian Railways.

International Sanctions

The EU, the United Kingdom (UK), other countries in Europe (including Norway and Switzerland), Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Japan, and South Korea, among others, also have responded to Russia’s war against Ukraine with sanctions. Many of these sanctions are identical or similar to U.S. sanctions. The EU, with U.S. support, directed the Society for Worldwide Interbank Financial Telecommunication (SWIFT) and other specialized financial messaging services to cease serving 10 leading Russian financial institutions. In addition, two days before Russia’s attack, the German government suspended certification of the Nord Stream 2 pipeline.

Starting December 5, 2022, the EU has banned most Russian oil imports. The United States has joined the EU, the UK, Canada, Japan, and Australia in setting a global price cap of $60 per barrel on Russian oil exports by banning nationals from providing maritime transport services for transactions above that price. Since March 2022, the U.S. Departments of Justice and the Treasury have collaborated with counterpart agencies internationally in forming a Russian Elites, Proxies, and Oligarchs (REPO) Task Force to strengthen enforcement of sanctions and other measures.

In addition to sanctions, hundreds of U.S. and international companies have exited the Russian market.

For more, see CRS In Focus IF12062, New Financial and Trade Sanctions Against Russia; and CRS In Focus IF12092, The Economic Impact of Russia Sanctions.

Author Information

Cory Welt
Specialist in Russian and European Affairs

Disclaimer

This document was prepared by the Congressional Research Service (CRS). CRS serves as nonpartisan shared staff to congressional committees and Members of Congress. It operates solely at the behest of and under the direction of Congress. Information in a CRS Report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to Members of Congress in connection with CRS’s institutional role. CRS Reports, as a work of the United States Government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS Report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS Report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain the permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.